Excerpt: . proportion of the sewage discharged from the North Bull outfall will not go beyond the bar, that during neap tides it will return into the harbour and flow up on Clontarf Strand, converting this Strand into a pestilential slob of about 1,600 acres in extent. We can scarcely imagine what this means. Possibly if we remember that the area of the bed of the Liffey uncovered at low water, west of O Connell Bridge, which is now so much complained of, is but the two-hundreth part of the area of Clontarf Strand, an idea may be formed of what this nuisance will become in hot summer weather, with a light wind blowing in from the sea. In time it would simply become intolerable to the township of Clontarf, and, sooner or later, the outfall would have to be abandoned for a more distant...
