Excerpt from The Story of a Young Man s Tramp Across Three States: Cooking His Meals Campong Along Three Hundred and Sixty Miles of Road in New Hampshire, Vermont and New York Probably a great many people believe, in a certain unconsidered way, that a world of new impressions and fascinations always remains to be discovered and enjoyed. But it needs some unusual experience or great change to prove this true. Such an experience or rather, succession of experiences, I had last Summer. Indeed, thinking now of my trip through New Hampshire, Vermont and New York, a distance altogether of three hundred and sixty miles, every footprint, every scene is as vivid as if I were there now - the lonely mountain roads with the black snakes shooting across the path, and the partridges running out for a second s reconnoitre; the miles of pleasant farmland, with nothing wilder than a woodchuck tumbling over a wall; the crowds of villagers; the blazing heat of the midday sun burning my face deeper and deeper; the calm light of the late moon waking me out of my dreams as I slept in the fields - all appear to me now, more actual as seen in the calm distance than they were to me then; for, looking at such things from the depths of a comfortable arm chair, one gets a truer perspective than in the excitement of the moment.
