It deals with the general principles of metallography and with some of the more important methods which are used to carry out general investigations in the metallographic laboratory. It is my intention to deal, in subsequent volumes, with the metallography of the more important metals and alloys, including steel, cast iron and the special steels, and the applications of metallography to the metallurgical and engineering industries. On account of the nature of the subject, certain of the important principles have been withheld for discussion simultaneously with the phase of the work with which they were most closely associated. For this reason the newer ideas on plastic deformation and grain growth will be considered in connection with the application of metallography to technical practice. The material presented naturally reflects my personal experience but it has been collected from every source which was available to me and presented in...
