GRIN Verlag Dez 2007, 2007. Taschenbuch. Book Condition: Neu. 210x148x2 mm. This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Seminar paper from the year 2000 in the subject Politics - International Politics - Topic: Miscellaneous, printed single-sided, grade: 90, erg International School - Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel (Department for Political Science), course: The Citizen and State in the Information Age, 52 entries in the bibliography, language: English, abstract: In this paper I will address the question if Cyberterror has to be viewed as one of the New Security Threats that will have to be dealt with as we enter the next millennium. To answer this I will highlight some of the possible targets in modern digitized states, democratic or not, and the means with which these targets can, and have been attacked. Throughout the paper I will show that, if there is any doubt about motivation, attacks on these very targets by civilian Hackers have been carried out ever since the whole phenomenon started. The question that has to be answered though is that of the reality and probability of cyberterror . Here the rationale is that if cyberattack is feasible, and if the means are available to the enemies of industrialized nations, than it will happen. This of course under the presumption that the will of these groups to hurt highly industrialized, capitalist, and western nations still exists; an assumption that is in my view save to make. Thus, lately, the US government, the EU, and others have included cyberattack in their list of the new security threats that have to be faced into the next century. But criticism has arisen as well. Civil liberty advocates have voiced their concern that the states are crying wolf so as to create a pretense to curtailing...
